

Livingston Correctional Facility Hosts Horticulture Flower Bed Competition

The morning and afternoon classes of the Vocational Horticulture program at Livingston Correctional Facility recently held a colorful competition. The challenge was to see which class could design the better flower bed. The facility executive team, led by Superintendent Jones, considered criteria including consistency of design, use of space, creative plant choices, and overall impression, in selecting the afternoon class as this year's winners. The prize was a special lunch of pizza topped with vegetables grown by the inmates themselves. All inmate participants say they enjoyed the competition and look forward to a rematch next year.
