

Livingston Correctional Facility Hosts Contests Among Educational and Vocational Programs

Livingston Correctional Facility’s Senior Librarian recently hosted a book showdown, a very popular program among inmates that was last hosted in April of this year. Six teams competed in the contest, which involved answering questions about three books they read in preparation for the showdown. Although each round of questions was very close, a new winner was determined through the competition and the teams look forward to the next opportunity to compete.

Livingston’s Horticulture class held a competition of its own—a “Green Thumb” contest between the morning and afternoon classes. The goal of the contest was to see which class had designed, planted, and maintained the best flower bed throughout the growing season. Although both gardens were exceptional, the judges determined that the morning class had taken this year’s contest.
